

Sentence #3	I've been painting the ceiling.
Form:	I	Have been painting	The ceiling
	Subject	Present perfect continuous	Object
	Subject + have + been + Present Participle + Object
Meaning:	To talk about an event in the past that was interrupted or to talk about an ongoing event that began in the past
Context:	[Cartoon/Picture]: A neighbor rings the door bell and the person who answers has on clothes covered in paint. S/he then has the speech bubble with "I've been painting the ceiling." written inside it.
CCQs:	Is the ceiling being painted? Is it finished? Has it started? Will it be finished?
Resource:	http://www.perfect-english-grammar.com/past-perfect-continuous-use.html
Sentence #4	Mind how you go!
Form:	Mind
	"Used to urge someone to remember or take care to do something: mind you look after the children" Oxford Dictionary
	Mind + Clause in the Imperative
Meaning:	To ask someone to heed your warning eg mind "the gap" mind "the road" etc
Context:	A copy of the London underground sign "Mind the gap"
CCQs:	What are synonyms of "mind" in this example?
Resource:	http://www.oxforddictionaries.com/definition/english/mind
Sentence #5	Don't phone now; they will be eating dinner.
Form:	they	will be eating	dinner
	subject	Future Continuous	Object
	... + (after an imperative) subject + Future Continuous + object
Meaning:	It is the extrinsic use of future continuous of something that is high in probability. (To give a reason or justification for the instruction in the imperative.)
Context:	Role-Play: One student can be pretending to eat dinner with another student. The teacher then asks another student to call them. Just before they call on their phone the teacher should stop them and say "Don't phone now; they will be eating dinner".
CCQs:	Are they eating dinner now? Are they finished? Have they started? How certain are they? Is eating dinner a routine, if so, is the routine known?
Resource:	http://www.englishpage.com/verbpage/futurecontinuous.html		